

Spot the Early Warning Signs of Cancer in Your Pet

It's a fact that close to half of pets over the age of ten die of cancer. Considering this, it's imperative as a responsible pet owner to keep a close eye on your furry family member to detect early warning signs of this disease. In addition to taking your pet in for annual examinations, perform your due diligence and be on the alert for the following:

-  A growing lump or sore that doesn't heal
-  Discharge or bleeding from any body opening
-  Weight loss despite normal appetite and activity
-  Going more than a day or two without eating
-  Demonstrating an unusually excessive appetite
-  An over consumption of water, followed by frequent urination
-  Difficulty in chewing or swallowing
-  Any unusually bad smell coming from your pet
-  Tiring easily and unwillingness to exercise

IF YOU NOTICE ONE OR MORE OF THESE SYMPTOMS IN YOUR DOG OR CAT, CONTACT YOUR VETERINARIAN.

Early detection is critical in the fight against pet cancer.
